January Meeting

Happy New Year!

Thursday, January 19, 2012
7:30 PM
at the National Museum of Civil War Medicine
48 East Patrick Street
Frederick, Maryland  21701

Speaker: Terry Reimer, Director of Research, National Civil War Medical Museum

Subject: Bad Doctors: Military Justice Proceedings Against 622 Civil War Surgeons

Our Speaker

Terry Reimer, Director of Research for the National Museum of Civil War Medicine (NMCWM), will kick off the New Year with a program about Civil War surgeons — the good, the bad and the ugly — based on her recent book, Bad Doctors: Military Justice Proceedings Against 622 Civil War Surgeons, co-authored with Thomas P. Lowry. Of the more than 12,000 surgeons who served in the war, most acted responsibly and discharged their medical duties with care. Most surgeons, but not all. A small number, 622, abused their positions so badly that they were tried in military court. Ms. Reimer’s book is a comprehensive study of those surgeons who exhibited outrageous behavior ranging from drunkenness and promiscuity to arrogance, rape, theft, insolence, even insanity. Ms. Reimer relied on original documents, focusing on the courts-martial records of both Union and Confederate forces. Union medical records were more complete, but Confederate records were adequate to provide a basis for comparison. Ms. Reimer and her co-author also thoroughly researched War Department records and records of the Surgeon General, all during the Civil War, as well as the annals of the United States Service Magazine from 1861 through 1865.

The result is a revealing, sometimes shocking, sometimes amusing portrait of surgeons behaving badly. The stress of a proportionately small group of surgeons trying to care for such a great number of battlefield wounded took its toll, and the authors found that the rate of surgeons who deserted the camps was nearly the same as that of ordinary soldiers.

In the final analysis, the authors conclude that the reputation of all Civil War surgeons as “drunken sawbones” to be feared is not totally deserved and that, despite the miscreants, by and large the surgeons exhibited the same flawed human behavior as other soldiers under the extreme duress of war.

Ms. Reimer is the author of two other books on Civil War medicine: One Vast Hospital: The Civil War Hospital Sites in Frederick, Maryland after Antietam, and Divided by Conflict, United by Compassion: The National Museum of Civil War Medicine.

Prior to her current position with the NMCWM, Ms. Reimer’s work includes more than 20 years of experience in historical archaeology and research, specializing in 17th, 18th and 19th century American sites. She holds a B.A. in Anthropology from the University of Maryland and did graduate work in anthropology and folklore studies at George Washington University. She has lived in Frederick for more than 20 years.

Following the lecture, Ms. Reimer will be available to sign copies of her book.

Next Month’s Speaker

At our next meeting, Feb. 16, 2012, at 7:30 pm, John Reid, Park Ranger and Historian at Manassas National Battlefield Park will discuss how the two battles of Manassas, July 1861 and August 1862, influenced the War.

The Prez Sez

Members, hope yours was a Merry Christmas! Our Christmas Party was just that — merry (thanks again, George). A good time was had by all! And thanks to the Ladies of the Roundtable, our refreshment table was once again laden with a delicious selection of treats. My thanks to all.

Here’s an interesting January fact: One of the last of 30,000 Confederate Prisoners of War released from Fort Delaware (on Pea Patch Island near the small town of Delaware City, DE) was Burton Harrison, Yale College graduate of 1859, who was Confederate President Jefferson Davis' personal secretary. He was released in January of 1866.

The history of Fort Delaware as a Confederate Prison is an interesting one. Dottie and I have made a trip to the Fort, which included a ferry ride out to the island. It is an amazing structure. We also had a representative from the Fort speak to our Roundtable some years ago. If you missed that lecture, and you’d like us to bring him back, contact anyone on the Board and we’ll see what we can do.

All good fortune to you and yours in this New Year of 2012.

Donnie

Christmas Party 2011 . . .

Great entertainment, a buffet of delectable holiday treats, and a successful silent auction combined for a fun evening.

In 1960, the South was still segregated, “racial equality” was little more than a phrase in sociology class — and the country was about to commemorate the Centennial of the Civil War. David W. Blight, renowned author and history professor at Yale, looks back 50 years to study how America was making sense of the War Between the States during a time of the greatest civil turmoil since that War. In this superb study, Blight highlights four dominant voices of the 1960s — author and historian Bruce Catton, novelist Robert Penn Warren, literary critic Edmund Wilson, African-American writer and activist James Baldwin — and explores their individual perspectives on why the War was fought and its everlasting yet ever-shifting impact.

The author goes to the heart of the matter — the War was about ending slavery — and examines how that central, underlying issue was side-stepped time and again in favor of a more sentimental theme of reunification. In his own words, Blight describes his book as “a discussion of four Americans in search of their country's history.” That is a discussion, and a book, well worth having.

Myron J. Smith Jr., library director and professor at Tusculum College in Tennessee, and author of numerous books on Civil War naval history, has written an outstanding account of the short but significant career of the CSS Arkansas. En route to Vicksburg in the summer of 1862, the Arkansas encountered the Union fleet, including the ironclad Carondolet, in a running battle. The Arkansas earned her place in history as she withstood heavy fire and inflicted more damage than she received. She successfully passed through the Union fleet, exchanging fire at close range, and arrived in Vicksburg to cheering crowds. Three weeks later, the 28-day career of the Arkansas ended in a blaze when, due to engine trouble, the ship was abandoned and set on fire near Baton Rouge.

This well-researched and fascinating account of the Arkansas is a “must-have” for anyone interested in the history of ironclads and the Mississippi River campaigns.

Ramblings from the Raffle Table

Friends, LUCKY YOU! Along with our ever-fun 50-Cent Raffle this month, we are able to again offer a Special Raffle of THREE of our FCCWRT caps (value $15 each). There will be three drawings, as before, so there will be three winners. Tickets will be $3 each. This Special Raffle will be offered in January and February, with the drawing occurring in February. This is the last of our supply, so—collectors items!

The winner of the Special Raffle knives at our Christmas Party was Jeff Bradshaw. Our Prez donated those knives, and he SAYS "Congratulations, Jeff."

High bidders for our December Silent Auctions were Gail Stephens, Jeff Bradshaw, Scott Fullerton, Don Goodwin, and Jim Enright. Congratulations to all of you, and thank you for bidding. There will be more Silent Auction items displayed at this month's meeting, so try your hand at bidding again! Come and look over this month's selection.

Again, Members and Friends, thank you all for participating in our fundraisers!

held captive for six months. Jack was so valued that he was exchanged for a prisoner at Belle Isle and returned to his regiment and battle duty. In appreciation of his valor, his fellow-soldiers gave him a silver collar.

On the night of Dec. 23, 1864, while on furlough with his regiment at Frederick, MD, Jack vanished. The entire regiment searched tirelessly for him, offering a sizable reward for his safe return, but Jack was never seen again. Given the dog’s devotion to his regiment, most likely he did not run away but was stolen for his collar, a surprisingly pricey item worth $75 at the time.

No trace of Jack or his silver collar has ever been found in Frederick.

To honor Jack’s courage and loyalty, the men of the 102nd commissioned an oil painting that hangs today in the Soldiers & Sailors Memorial Museum in Pittsburgh.
