259th Meeting

April 2017

Volume 43, Issue 8

April 20, 2017, 7:00 PM National Museum of Civil War Medicine 48 E. Patrick St, Frederick, Maryland

Speaker: Nancy Householder

Topic: Monuments of Gettysburg

The monuments at Gettysburg were mostly put up by the veterans themselves. They have two purposes, to honor comrades who died in battle, and to remember what they did. They have many special symbols and stories that go with them and these will be explained.

Nancy Householder is currently the Vice President of the Pipe Creek Civil War Round Table and former President. She has been studying to be a Licensed Battlefield Guide for the Gettysburg National Military Park, and is a docent at the Union Mills Homestead for more than 25 years. She has also been a guide for Ghosts of Gettysburg Candlelight Walking Tours for the past 12 years.

In Case You Missed It.....

At our March meeting we were treated with Dr. Thomas Clemens' presentation of "Shepherdstown Ford and the End of the Maryland Campaign," volume three of the Ezra Carman manuscript. As a review, Dr. Clemens explained Carman's role in creating the Antietam Battlefield as we know it today.

According to Carman, both army commanders (Lee and McClellan) had intentions to continue the Maryland Campaign after the bloodshed at Antietam, but the aftermath of the Shepherdstown battle really determined the end of the campaign. Lincoln realized that McClellan would do no more to destroy Lee's Army and Lee knew that his army was too weak to continue the offensive. Still, McClellan does not appear to be the incompetent slacker that history has portrayed him to be and that there truly were problems of supply that hindered his ability to move aggressively.

As with so many of the often written about battles of the Civil War there is usually more to the story than we know. Politics, logistics, and other factors affected the final outcome although these may not have been obvious at the time. Antietam and the Maryland Campaign was no exception. Clemens' third volume sheds great light on these as well as provides biographical information on some 1500 of those mentioned in Carman's manuscripts. Clemens' books were available for sale at our meeting but you can still get them through Amazon, the Antietam Battlefield bookstore, and other venues.

FCCWRT SNOW POLICY

We should be finished with the winter season but April can sometimes surprise us. If Frederick County Schools and/or the National Museum of Civil War Medicine (meeting location) announce closures for the afternoon/evening of the meeting our meeting will be cancelled. We will make every attempt to send an email and Facebook notification as soon as the cancellation decision is made. Please use your best judgment in making safety your top priority.

Ramblings from the Raffle Table

April showers (the ones that bring May flowers) are the perfect excuse to curl up with a good book. And so this month I am featuring two selections by Burke Davis. Davis was a very prolific writer and his historical works capture the imagination and place the reader in the midst of the action. With Civil War buffs he is a popular writer. I know that because almost all of his writings have crossed my path as donations and show signs of respectful reads: there are no dog-eared pages or broken spines. So from the author of The Gray Fox and They Called Him Stonewall.....

JEB Stuart, the Last Cavalier brings to life the larger than life JEB Stuart. The gallant and dashing cavalier that rode circles around every Yankee he ever met. And the debonair black plumed gentleman who dazzled every belle he ever met. Who else could inspire the song “If you want to have a good time join the cavalry, join the cavalry, join the cavalry.....” You will be at his side from West Point, through the western frontier, to his fateful devotion to Virginia.

The Long Surrender brings to light the heartbreak of the fall of the Confederacy and the desperation of the days and years that followed it. It was a time of personal crisis for Davis and his Cabinet as the final curtain fell on the dream of an independent nation. While some escaped into exile, Jeff Davis becomes a Martyr of the Lost Cause, his name still whispered with reverence, his White House preserved in Richmond.

May the weather cooperate and give you time to savor the treasures we offer to you each month. Thank you for your contributions & participation every month.

For Gettysburg events, go to nps.gov/gett/planyourvisit/interpretation.htm. There is something happening there just about every weekend, from lectures to battlefield hikes. As the temperatures rise, so do the crowds!

This list is by no means all inclusive. Warmer weather means more events, and you can find more at these and other sites: <http://www.civilwarnews.com/>, <http://www.civilwar.com/>, and <http://www.civilwartraveler.com/events/>. I use the latter site heavily. You can always use our Facebook page to connect with members taking their own tours during the month. What better way to explore local battlefields and historic sites than to go with your fellow members!
